motwithstanding the desperate contest so lately gone through in the Crimea. The German powers are too much disumited to make their strength available. What do France and Russia intend to do: What is the matter with them all that they must needs fight? There are reasons enough, perhaps, if the rossons for war heretofore, have been sufficient; but what are the people of Europe to gain by wasting oceans of blood and treasure in destroying each other. It remains to be seen. Wars in Europe, heretofore, have not amounted to much; but things have changed; the results now may be of vast importance.
